4 Being a Faithful Church:

5 Testing the spirits in the Midst of Hermeneutical Ferment

8 Background

10 The General Board of Mennonite Church Canada monitors the spiritual health of our 11 church. This is not an easy task, because it is not easy to be the church, in Canada, in the 12 21st century. Some writers have, in fact, suggested that Canada is a country with “very 13 hard soil” for the gospel of Jesus Christ: one of the hardest anywhere in the world. We 14 face challenges, and each one is worth faces with the integrity of being the church.

16 The General Board understands that the ongoing health of our church requires that we 17 continue to strengthen our overall capacity to discern¹ the mind of God as the church
18 engages the critical agenda of our time. This need/capacity to discern is important in all
19 aspects of our life together. It is important in how we worship, and in how we organize. It 20 is also important in how we respond to questions of faithfulness that are within and 21 among us. The General Board, along with other circles of counsel, tries to discern what 22 the important themes are that require ongoing attention. Themes that have been identified 23 in the last years are:

24

a) Unity and Diversity in the life of the Church;

25

b) Being a Peace church;

26

c) Confessing and witnessing to Jesus Christ as Lord in a religiously pluralistic context;

27

28

d) Human sexuality in the life of the church;

29

e) Ecological concerns from a perspective of faith.

30

31 The need to be a biblically-grounded people is not new, but it is important to re-ignite our 32 commitment and our capacity to be a people of God’s Word. Specifically, this means 33 that:

34

1) We covenant with each other to study the Bible together and explore the biblical teachings.

2) We covenant with each other to mutually bear the burden of remaining in loving dialogue with each other in the body of Christ. We are all sinners in need of God’s grace and we know that the Holy Spirit can lead us to further truth and to repentance where needed.

37

38

39

40

3) We covenant compassion and prayer for each other.

41

4) We covenant to take part in the ongoing search for discernment and for openness to each other.

¹ The words “discern” and “discernment” come from the Latin discernere. Cernere means to separate, distinguish, or sift. Dis means to take off. It is a good word to talk about the need to sift, and to test what is among us. The Greek New Testament word most often translated as “discern” is dokimazo (used 31 times). This word too refers to testing, examining, and interpreting. It is a continuous process of faith in God and faithfulness to God.

1 5) We covenant with God that as we discern his will for our lives and our fellowship
2 we will seek to obey it, through his grace and strength.

5 Purpose:

6 This paper is a resource to help us think together how spiritual discernment may nourish
7 our faithfulness to God’s will for the church in our world.

9 Why now?

10
11 As a national church we are facing the complex reality that while different parts of our 12 Body (Priesthood of Believers) are reflecting on the same foundational scripture, guided 13 by the same Holy Spirit, revealing the mind/will of the same God, we are discerning 14 what appear, at times, to be contradictory and irreconcilable directions in understanding 15 Christian faithfulness.

17 Hermeneutical² diversity is not new, neither in Christian ecumenical nor Mennonite 18 experience. Such diversity has been/ is present in understanding God’s will in:
19 circumcision, slavery, the role of women in ministry, pacifism, economic models, relation 20 to creation, church structure, ecclesial authority and autonomy, and so on. It is important, 21 therefore, to ask why we need to pay special attention to our capacity to discern within 22 our denomination now. The answer, by necessity, is more related to the art of being the 23 church than to the science of hermeneutical process. Basically, we believe that churchly 24 faithfulness to scripture comes to life within an Anabaptist community through our 25 common commitment to “sift,” and to seek clarity in our desire to be God’s obedient 26 people.

- 27
28 1) As Mennonites, we believe that the church needs to be scripturally grounded, and 29 that hermeneutics are ecclesially³-based. Both of these elements signal to us that 30 we need to take a close look at what is happening among us.
31 2) We are committed to being the church amid the spiritual unrest and ferment that is 32 among us

33 What follows is an attempt to think organically and organizationally about the 34 ingredients/components that the task of careful discernment places before us. The Book
35 of Proverbs says that:

36
37 Without counsel, plans go wrong, but with a multitude of counselors they succeed
38 (Prov.15:22).

39
40 This is wise counsel for us in our time too. We are not, of course, starting at point zero.
41 Very much discernment and many processes are already a part of our experience as a 42 denomination. None of what is stated here is meant to negate the efforts that have gone 43 before. Indeed, quite the opposite. What is stated here is building on these efforts and is

² Hermeneutics comes from the Greek language, hermeneutikos, and refers to the skill of interpretation, the capacity to make something clear.

³ Ecclesial comes from the Greek New Testament word ekklesia which means “church.”

1 made possible only because of these many other encounters and processes that are 2 already part of our communal experience. We acknowledge each of these with gratitude.

6 The Ongoing Task: Is Discernment Necessary?

8 Seeking clarity in faithfulness in Christian life is the never-ending, non-optional vocation
9 of God's people. Such discernment is a critical component of the ongoing learning
10 needed for faithfulness in the world. Several biblical texts remind us of this ongoing task:
11

12 Luke 12:54-56:

13 Jesus teaches that "interpreting the times" (literally: the kairos of God) must be as 14 constant a discipline of the church as understanding weather patterns that shape 15 our life. He laments the lack of capacity to do that. The inability or the 16 unwillingness to discern the times is either due to hypocrisy, creates hypocrisy, or 17 both.

18 Matthew 18:1-35 (see also John 20:22-23):

19 One of the amazing, and in its context, heretical, tasks given to the church is to 20 deal with sin: to discern it, to forgive it, or to retain it. That this task is given to 21 the "two or three" as they gather together in the name of Christ is a very large 22 and, heretofore, inconceivable responsibility. The assumptions till then had been 23 that this was the sole responsibility of God. The first step in dealing with sin is to 24 discover it and to name it. The criteria for doing so are not provided in this text.
25 This must be the ongoing vocation of the gathered church.

26 I John 4, 5:

27 The potential for false teaching within the church is significant. The church's 28 discipleship/faithfulness antennae must always be on high alert. The church is 29 given the task of "testing the spirits, to see if they are of God" (I John 4:1). The 30 reason for this is because the spiritual sources of common wisdom and practice 31 may not always be readily evident, i.e. it is not always immediately clear which 32 "spirits" are nurturing common assumptions.

33 John 16:1-15:

34 Jesus promises his disciples that when he leaves he will send the Spirit, the 35 Paraclete, to accompany them. One of the key functions of this Spirit in the midst 36 of the community is the ongoing task of teaching them what truth is, where it is to 37 be found, and how it needs to be practiced. The hermeneutical community under 38 the guidance of the Holy Spirit thus becomes the locus of authoritative
39 discernment of God's will revealed in Holy Scripture and in contextual practice.
40

41 The common element in all of these passages is the assumption that discerning the mind
42 of God in order to be a faithful people of God is an ongoing task. Indeed, this is more 43 than a mere task: it is a foundational vocation of what it means to be God's people, 44 incarnate in the world, in order to save it from its destructive potential.
45

46 For Anabaptists, the authority of scripture is understood to be unleashed only when God's 47 people carefully and prayerfully discern the will of God through the presence of the Holy 48 Spirit guiding the church into an understanding of scripture that reflects God's will for

1 the world. Scripture, according to this understanding, loses its functional authority for our 2 world when the community becomes hermeneutically unfaithful or dysfunctional.

4 Scripture and experience both point to two important ingredients as we engage the 5 ongoing task of discernment:

6 a) God has been with us. We can be confident in what has been. There is enough life 7 lived, truth revealed, and wisdom absorbed that provide a sufficient platform for 8 faithful living.

9 b) God will be with us. We must be open to spiritual surprises. It is not that there is 10 new spiritual truth invented, but the Spirit can uncover old truths for us in 11 surprising ways. It is the ongoing, often vulnerable, responsibility of the church to 12 remain open to the surprises that God may have in store for us.

13 These two ingredients may appear to be in tension. And they may generate 14 misunderstanding, conflict, threat, and impatience. But both ingredients come from the 15 same source, God, and we need not fear. It is the vocation of the church to walk in this 16 tension.

18 Yet, even as the church engages the process of discernment, we confess that, at best, we 19 will only understand “through a glass darkly [or in a mirror dimly]” (I Cor. 13:12). Our 20 definitions and pronouncements are never the last word. Our discernment too comes 21 under the judgment of the Spirit of Truth and the wisdom of God revealed in God’s 22 kairos (time) and in our chronos (time). Doctrine, theology, and confession do not 23 replace the living Word of God, that continually brings us into fuller truth and 24 understanding that reflects the eternal will of God for his world.

25 26 Practical Options

27
28 The practical implication of such ongoing discernment is that the church will always 29 speak, and then it must always speak again. And when it speaks again, it will have three 30 options, each of which can potentially be a faithful or an unfaithful option. Many 31 examples could be given. We will limit ourselves to only a few:

32 a) The church can repeat again what it has said before:

33 Example from the Bible: Jesus’ reference to part of the shema as the 34 greatest commandment: “Love the Lord your God with all your heart, with 35 all your mind, and with all your strength, and your neighbour as yourself.”

36 Example from church history: Mennonites reaffirming their 37 understanding of pacifism in spite of the persecution against them from 38 without, and the pressures from within in the 16th century and during 39 World War I and II.

40 b) The church can modify what it has said before, given some new spiritual 41 understandings. This would normally mean that it can move further but in the 42 same direction that it has moved before.

43 Example from the Bible: Jesus’ desire to fulfil and not to abolish the law
44 with his six references to: “You have heard that it was said, But I say 45 to you....”

46 Example from church history: Mennonites slowly moving from an 47 understanding of “non-resistance” to “non-violent resistance.”

1 c) The church can change what it has said before because new perspectives have 2 become apparent and compelling, and shifting the relative authority of canonical 3 voices has been discerned to be necessary.

4 Example from the Bible: The understanding of the “chosen people” to 5 include the Gentiles in a new way, which in turn changed the 6 understanding of circumcision and food laws in affirming what “seemed 7 good to the Holy Spirit and to us.”

8 Example from church history: The church’s defence of slavery not being 9 justifiable, and the equal role of women in the ministry of the church to be 10 good.

12 There is always tension between sufficient wisdom and spiritual surprise as the church is 13 intentional about discernment. Therefore, the church will not (cannot) know which of the 14 three outcomes it will experience. Spiritual/biblical discernment ultimately is an exercise
15 of faith in and submission to the work of the Holy Spirit in the midst of God’s 16 community. The church always engages discernment on the foundation of what it has 17 discerned before. Discernment does not mean that we are adrift or that there is no anchor.
18 We are confident in the past presence of God with us, and the sufficiency of the wisdom 19 that has been discerned. Discernment does not presuppose change, but it is open to 20 surprises engineered by the Holy Spirit. This means that while the foundation is solid, 21 where discernment will end up is not predetermined. It is open to the inherent tension of 22 sufficiency and surprise. The church need not, however, fear. A discerning community 23 will come to the point where it can say “it has seemed good to the Holy Spirit and to 24 us...” (Acts 15:28). And this is the trust and faith that allows the church to be the church,
25 engaging its God-given vocation of confronting sin and engaging obedience. Conversely,
26 a church that avoids, refuses, or cannot engage its vocation of ongoing discernment
27 cannot be the church.

28 29 Being a Faithful Church

30
31 Spiritual discernment engages us in deliberate processes that help us face the challenges
32 in the life of the church. What is at stake, fundamentally, is not whether a previous 33 position will be re-stated (spiritual sufficiency) or whether a new road will be forged 34 (spiritual surprise). What is at stake is our capacity to be the church in fulfilling our 35 ongoing vocation of discerning the kairos of God for our time. In other words, the 36 primary issue is not what exactly we will decide about the challenges that face us; the 37 primary issue is whether we can be the church in doing so. It is very important not to lose 38 sight of this fundamental focus.

40 This, however, begs an all important question. What are the ingredients that make the 41 church the church as it engages tough and potentially divisive conversations? Let us 42 suggest a few key ingredients that are foundational:

- 43
44 1) Understand that we are engaging a spiritual exercise. Spiritual discernment is not 45 focused on personal preferences, peer pressure, social niceties, political 46 correctness, scientific debate, or institutional power. While all these undoubtedly 47 shape and influence us, we must understand our process to be focussed on 48 discerning the mind of God for our lives for our time. We have the full assurance

- 1 that God's Spirit will be present, and that we need not fear the outcomes. And we 2 can be grateful that God is God and we are not.
- 3 2) Understand that as a spiritual exercise, we will engage seriously the spiritual 4 disciplines as taught to us by our Lord. Such a process needs to be bathed in 5 prayer for each other, meeting together with each other, studying scripture
6 together, fasting, worship, listening, celebration, discernment, conversation, and a 7 commitment to learn.
- 8 3) Understand that we are engaging an ecclesial (churchly) exercise. We believe that 9 in God's wisdom, the church has been called to be the primary vehicle for 10 teaching and living out the good news of God's Kingdom present in the world.
11 We are, therefore, confident that an ecclesial process is necessary, sufficient, and 12 good for us at this time. In doing so, we are engaging conversations about the life 13 of the church. It makes sense that those who participate would do so from the 14 basis of a commitment to make the church strong and faithful.
- 15 4) Understand that God's Spirit and therefore God's wisdom are not confined to the 16 church. Because this is a spiritual exercise, the domain for understanding the 17 Spirit's work in the world, is the world itself. This suggests that we should not be 18 surprised to discover and learn spiritual truth from individuals, groups, society, 19 science, politics, and institutions. "Interpreting the signs of the times" means to 20 interpret what God is doing within and beyond the church in order to bring about 21 his Kingdom.
- 22 5) Understand that by engaging an ecclesial process, internal to the church, we 23 believe the church to be a priesthood of all believers. This suggests that all 24 "priests" of the church are welcome to participate and each of these voices needs
25 to be heard with integrity and sincerity. It does not mean that each priest stands
26 before God in a way unaccountable to the priesthood. The priesthood of all 27 believers does not mean full agreement of all priests with the priesthood. It does 28 mean taking seriously the voice of the priesthood, even when our personal 29 opinions or preferences may differ. It means being confident that God's Spirit will 30 work through the church as a community of discernment as is promised in 31 scripture.
- 32 6) Understand that our commitment to be the church as a priesthood of believers will 33 mean that there will be those who want to advocate for the sufficiency of what has 34 been discerned till now, and those who will advocate for change based on their 35 view of the surprises of the Spirit through a re-reading of experience and 36 scripture. It would be normal to have advocates in such a process, but we would 37 understand that advocacy is done to strengthen the Body of Christ in faithfulness
38 to God, not for the purpose of winning. Because advocates are needed in such a 39 process, the process itself must not be polarized much less adversarial.
- 40 7) Understand that such a process would, naturally, desire to come to a point of the 41 church speaking again. As indicated, this might mean saying the same thing, 42 modifying previous speech, or change direction from previous discernment. In 43 other words, while the process may be long, it is not entirely open-ended.
- 44 8) Understand that this process is designed to energize, not drain, the missional 45 capacities of the church. When we understand discernment as fulfilling the 46 vocation of the church, we will be able to see this as an opportunity and not as a 47 problem. This will energize our identity as a church.
- 48

1 Summary

3 A missional/Anabaptist church is committed to its vocation of relevant presence and 4 ministry in the place and time into which God has placed us. God wants us to see the 5 potential for ecclesial renewal within our circumstances. Spiritual discernment is an 6 opportunity for spiritual renewal and growth.
7 Strengthening our capacity to discern together is a way of taking seriously our vocation
8 as God’s people in this time and place. It is a way of engaging God’s kairos (time) within 9 our chronos (time). This is a vocation to which the church has been permanently called.
10 This is one opportunity (among many) for our generation to demonstrate that the church
11 can “be worthy of the calling to which we have been called” (Eph. 4:1). It is our vocation 12 to be the church, and when we face this vocation squarely, God’s Spirit will guide us and 13 “make peace” among us (Eph. 2:14). We cannot predict how God will do this work 14 among us, but we can be confident that he will do this work among us.

15
16 The heart and soul of facing the need for discernment is our conviction that the church is 17 worth the effort. In a sense, being more deliberate in strengthening this part of our 18 vocation may represent an opportunity of our generation to demonstrate the solid mettle
19 that is at the heart of our commitment to be a faithful Mennonite church in our time and 20 place.
